Do escalated couples make you want to quit being a therapist? Join us as we explore those moments of greatest difficulty for couples, from still-face to high reactivity to despair and rage. Learn how to keep your focus and go deeper into the face of reactivity. We will explore, demonstrate, practice, and integrate in an interactive, experiential way. Through a combination of lecture, videotape, and exercises, participants will learn to identify the basic stages and steps of Emotionally Focused Therapy and to help couples recognize and de-escalate problematic cycles of interaction.

Objectives of the Training: (1) Identify the key assumptions of attachment theory as it applies to adult relationships; (2) Identify the assumptions, stages, and steps of EFT, as well as key change events; (3) Articulate key interventions that help clients to reprocess key emotional responses and reduce reactivity; (4) Identify common therapeutic impasses in EFT and how to address them and implement EFT interventions in clinical exercises and case examples; (5) Name the different structural elements/ parts of the cycle; (6) Describe the process model of emotion as defined by Magda Arnold; (7) Describe 3 underlying emotions that withdrawers feel; (8) Describe 3 underlying emotions that pursuers feel; (9) Define the EFT clinical skills associated with De-escalation; (10) Describe the function of protective strategies that create negative cycles; and (11) Identify the positive cycle of responsiveness to replace the escalated, negative cycle.
